

CALL FOR PAPERS

SOCIAL HISTORY SOCIETY ANNUAL CONFERENCE 2011

The 2011 annual conference of the Social History Society will take place at the University of Manchester from Tuesday 12 to Thursday 14 April 2011.

Please submit proposals for papers via the Social History Society website – <http://www.socialhistory.gellius.net/annualconference.php>

The deadline is 4 October 2010.

We encourage submissions of panels of up to 4 speakers. Proposals for individual papers of up to 20 minutes are, of course, also welcome.

Postgraduate students are encouraged to offer papers. Details of bursaries and the postgraduate paper prize are available on the conference website.

Papers presented at the conference can be submitted to the Society's journal, Cultural and Social History, to be considered for publication. For details, see <http://www.socialhistory.gellius.net/Journal.php>.

General enquiries should be sent to: Mrs. Linda Persson, Administrative Secretary, Social History Society, Furness College, Bailrigg, Lancaster, LA1 4YG (01524 592547; l.persson@lancaster.ac.uk).

The Society's conference has no single theme. It is organised in six strands:

- Deviance, Inclusion and Exclusion
- Life-cycles and Life-styles
- Markets, Culture and Society
- Political Cultures, Policy and Citizenship
- Narratives, Emotions and the Self
- Spaces and Places

Deviance, Inclusion and Exclusion

This strand investigates issues related to the history of individuals, ideas and practices considered errant or dangerous to the societies in which they occur and the mechanisms of criticism, comment and control that operate in these societies. This covers the study of law, crime, deviance, forms of behaviour and the practices of inclusion and exclusion. The strand welcomes case studies, comparative studies across region/national boundaries as well as across chronologies. It also welcomes work investigating the theory and historiography that is relevant to research in these areas.

Proposals for papers that explore these themes in relation to any historical period or region of study or from any disciplinary perspective are welcomed. Proposals for panels of 2-3 papers and chair, discussion panels or single papers are equally welcome.

Life-Cycles and Life-Styles

How were the everyday experiences of humans shaped by aspects of life-cycles and life-styles across time and space? This strand has two main focuses: firstly, it will consider the centrality of ages and stages of the human life-cycle in reconstructing historical experiences. The construction and differentiation of these experiences may be explored in their biological, medical, social, political and cultural contexts. Contributors may address the shifting material dimensions of everyday life and/or changing understandings of temporality and belief. How the life-course can shape patterns of memory could also be addressed. Concepts of transition (e.g. rites of passage) between life stages will also be considered alongside themes of time, age, generation and agency in sketching the contours of historical quotidian.

The second key focus falls upon life-styles and their social meanings, which may be explored within a variety of contexts, including material culture, sex and gender, religious beliefs, political, social and cultural identities. The strand will explore the relationship between life-styles and the creation of personal identities, whilst also debating whether life-styles were products or creations of social fragmentation by class, gender, ethnicity or 'race'. Submissions are welcomed which address either theme, whether in relation to individuals, groups or societies.

Sasha Handley: sasha.handley@northumbria.ac.uk

Markets, Culture and Society

This strand addresses the relationship between markets, culture and societies. We invite papers that consider the interaction between aspects of the economy, culture and society from the Middle Ages to the present and specifically welcome papers that explore such questions outside the European hemisphere. Papers are also welcome which focus on specific situations, actors, and contexts and that include analyses of producers, employers, employees, consumers, market actors, citizens etc. Issues addressed in this strand include, amongst others:

- the ethics of consumption, social standards, sustainability and environmentalism
- civil society, the state and the economic and political order
- intellectuals, social critique and the making (or unmaking) of social and market structures
- globalisation, divergence/convergence, 'core-periphery' and other models in global history
- culture and economy, the business of culture, the culture(s) of business
- social and cultural worlds of work, the factory and other workplaces as social and cultural spaces

The strand explicitly encourages speakers to reflect on the theoretical frameworks and/or reflect on global and/or comparative perspectives.

Political Cultures, Policy and Citizenship

What have been the roles of groups and individuals in the development of political cultures and the formulation and application of policy? We welcome proposals exploring this question in local, regional, national or trans-national contexts, within or beyond formal structures, and with reference to any time period or ideology.

Areas to explore might include: political debates and their representation in the broader culture (and how new technologies of communication affect them); political participation from apathy to activism; the ways and means of everyday political practice; relationships between popular culture and political culture; the cultural practices deployed in politicisation and persuasion; the influence of political icons and iconic moments.

Individual papers or panels of up to three papers exploring these themes are all encouraged. Proposals from postgraduate students are especially welcome.

Narratives, Emotions and the Self

This strand invites papers that explore the historical intersection between culture, memory and the self. Mike Roper has argued that much recent work within cultural history has focused upon the 'public narrative forms and social practices through which personal accounts are composed' and, in the process, has treated subjectivity as 'no more than an artefact of representation'. Taking Roper's critique as a starting point, we want to encourage further interdisciplinary debate about the historical meanings and constitution of selfhood. To what extent should selfhood be conceptualised as a function of discourse or as a psychic process? Within what interpretive categories did individuals in the past make sense of or understand their lives? In what ways might historians approach the relationship between cultural formations and subject formations? How are these processes constituted through the work of memory, which is itself a form of representation? In asking these questions, we hope to emphasise the historically- and culturally-specific nature of those 'modern' notions of the self we take for granted today

Spaces and Places

This strand explores the shape of the past, the specificity of place, the influence of environment, the nature of boundaries, and the impact of travel. It maps divisions - whether they be urban-rural, region-nation, centre-periphery, north-south, metropole-diaspora - and the communications that flow between them. It is concerned with the exchange of people, materials and ideas across spaces, whether through migration, trade, or conflict. It explores how landscape shapes historical relations, and how place and experience intertwine. It examines the historical role of imaginary places, and the contribution of wanderers and explorers. Contributors are also invited to consider how the shape of the past can best be visualised, particularly in the light of new technology, and how a sense of place informs collective memory.

Proposals may deal with any period and may treat any portion of the globe.

Individual papers or panels of up to three papers exploring these themes are all encouraged, as are interdisciplinary papers uniting history with geography and other social sciences. Proposals from postgraduate students are particularly welcomed.
